Message

It is heartening to know that the National Board of Examinations in Medical Sciences (NBEMS) has launched an online training programme on Artificial Intelligence in Healthcare for medical doctors. This initiative reflects NBEMS's continued commitment to strengthening medical education and ensuring that the medical fraternity remains abreast of emerging developments in healthcare.

The Ministry of Health & Family Welfare is committed to promoting the responsible adoption of digital technologies in healthcare through policy frameworks, capacity-building initiatives, and national programmes aimed at strengthening digital health infrastructure. Efforts such as the Ayushman Bharat Digital Mission and other digital health reforms emphasize the Ministry's focus on technology-enabled, patient-centric, and accessible healthcare.

In this context, structured academic programmes like this play a vital role in preparing doctors to effectively engage with emerging technologies and integrate them meaningfully into clinical practice. By equipping doctors with foundational knowledge and practical insights into AI, this programme will contribute to building a future-ready medical workforce.

I commend NBEMS for taking this forward-looking initiative and for its continued contribution to postgraduate medical education in the country. NBEMS has consistently played a pivotal role in upholding standards of excellence in medical training, and this programme further strengthens that legacy.

I am confident that this program will be a successful one just like all other endeavours of NBEMS. I extend my best wishes to NBEMS and all participating doctors for the successful conduct of this programme.
